is a white buildog running around loose somewhere near Central Park at this moment that, if you take HAD ASTHMA West Forty-seventh street station, is a der. The sergeant says he fired one bullet down Mr. Dog's throat and another perfectly good shot into his side. Yet the dog was last seen streaking it

Tet the dog was last seen streaking it across fhe park with all the ease of an unshot canine in a hurry.

It all happened in the Central Park Riding Academy, No. 585 Seventh avenue, where the elite gather daily for the morning canter. Into the middle of a particularly select gathering in the academy to-day strolled John Gayner, sixty years old, stableman, a bit unsteady on his pins. With John was a fine white buildog on a piece of cord. John was asked to move out, but felt his rights keenly and "sleked" the dog on the man who suggested that he move along.

Women in riding habits jumped for safe places. Gayner dared all the world to come on. Proprietor Heinemann telephoned the West Forty-seventh street station, asking for the reserves and anything else in the line of police they might have handy.

Sergeant Duane tried to arrest Gayner, who invited the dog to put the sergeant out. Duane began snooting. The dog looked at him reproachfully and made a dash for the door.

Gayner was locked up on a charge of disorderly conduct and intoxication.
